Film Extension Activity- Apply to today

While what was happening around Skeeter was wrong, especially by today's standards, in Jackson, Mississippi, in the 1960s many of Skeeter's peers accepted the uneven treatment of white and black people. The Civil Rights Movement during the 1950s and 1960s helped change some of the laws in the United States preventing racial inequality. However, inequality still exists on some levels in the United States and all over the world, whether racially, socially, between different religions and many other ways.

Directions: Use one of the prompts below to discuss inequality around you and consider ways to make an impact in your community to change it for the better. After viewing the film and having explored this topic in our history course. Select ONE of the prompts below and write a ½ page response, citing real life examples in the space below

1. Have you witnessed unequal treatment of people around you? Who is being treated differently? Why do you think people treat this person or this group of people differently?

2. Have you ever treated a person differently than others based on the way they look or because of their beliefs? Why?

3. Have you ever been treated differently than others? Why? How did this different treatment make you feel?

4. If you've ever been treated differently than others based on gender, race or religious beliefs, how did you deal with this unequal treatment? What was the outcome?
